Irish Lad, Saves 25 Miners, but Loses His Own Life.

Not all the deeds of bravery are in the war zone. When a fire in the Speculator mine near Butte, Mont., entombed several hundred men and brought death to 145 others, a twentyyear-old Irish lad named Manus Duggan, known as a "nipper boy," or tool boy, saved 25 miners by his coolness and self-sacrifice But he paid for devotion to duty with his life. His body was taken from the mine five days

When the first flash of flames, smoke and deadly gas cut off all retreat from the mine. Duggan was caught with a number of companions in a distant tunnel. Reared in the mines at Butte. he knew every nook and turn in the underground workings. He guided a and India two thousand years ago, and party of miners through the tunnels to the Greeks of course knew the pearl a spot comparatively free from gas and recognized its value.
